Most people think wars are fought with soldiers, tanks, and bombs. But some of the most devastating conflicts in history were fought with currencies. In this episode of The Financial Historian, we uncover the hidden economic battles that never made it into your school textbooks — from the British pound's fight for survival after the First World War, to the United States' secret campaigns to protect the dollar, to the silent currency collapses that brought entire economies to their knees.

This is not just economic history — it's financial education that shows how money and power are inseparable. You'll learn how inflation, devaluation, and exchange rate manipulation became weapons, how financial systems are built and destroyed in global crises, and why the same tactics are still used today. The past reveals a pattern: currency wars rarely end with a winner, but they always leave behind casualties.

Packed with real events, sharp analysis, and modern parallels, this video will change the way you see the financial system. Because the next currency war might already be happening — and you're in it whether you know it or not.

It's theft... of time, energy, equity and property. A slave is one who owes property taxes, no matter which 'party' is in power.
Excellent video, ty.

Shaving silver off coins and replacing the balance with base metals is historical ground zero origin of printing 'money' as immoral monetary debasement. Govts giving you nothing (paper/base metals) for your something (pre gold, silver). The confiscation is evident. gradualism is a killer.
